

CONTRIBUTORS

Andrew Bilodeau, Yale University: a senior majoring in history. Andrew's research areas primarily concern criminalization and the carceral state in North America, and he plans to pursue these interests further through a career in academia and advocacy for decarceration. His work has also been published in the Michigan Journal of History and the James Blair Historical Review. You can reach him at andrewpbilodeau@gmail.com.

Jason Daniels, The University of Alabama: an undergraduate from Houston, TX enrolled in legal history and jurisprudence philosophy concentrations, with a minor in anthropology. His specific areas of historical interest include early twentieth-century labor history, the home front of the First World War, and the development of American privacy law. After graduating, he plans to attend law school and pursue a career advocating for privacy protections in the legal field.

Greyson Hoye, Pacific Lutheran University: a senior, who, upon graduating in Spring 2021, will have completed majors in global studies, history, and German, with a minor in French. His academic research has focused primarily on topics related to the Second World War and the Holocaust, but his work has recently expanded to include more contemporary events, particularly the development of post-communist states after the fall of the Soviet Union. In the future, Greyson plans to join the United States Foreign Service and represent American interests overseas.

Aaron Freedman, Swarthmore College: a graduate with a degree in history and a minor in political science. Originally from New York City, Aaron is a freelance journalist writing about politics and pop culture. His historical interests include American foreign policy, labor history, and political history. He is hoping to pursue a PhD in history.

James Richie, The United States Military Academy at West Point: a recent graduate from Cypress, Texas, with a major in international history and a minor in geography. James enjoys studying all fields of history, but specializes in the decolonization of European empires following the Second World War. His other fields of interest include general British history and medieval warfare. He currently serves as an Army officer at Fort Benning, and hopes to one day earn a master's degree in history and teach at West Point.

Kayla J. Smith, Washington University in St. Louis: a senior born and raised Atlanta, Georgia, Kayla is majoring in American culture studies and minoring in history. Her historical interests include black women's history, criminality studies, and history of sexuality. After graduation, she will attend the PhD program in history at Columbia University.