

CONTRIBUTORS

Scott Benigno, Emory University: from Middletown, New Jersey, Scott graduated summa cum laude in history with a minor in economics in May 2022. In his time at Emory, he completed a senior honors thesis and was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity. Now graduated, Scott works in Washington D.C. as a Program Associate for the Africa Division of the American Bar Association Rule of Law Initiative. In his free time, he plays tennis, watches sports, and conducts research and writes geopolitical risk analysis for Foreign Brief, an open-source geopolitical intelligence platform.

James Murphy, The University of Alabama: a Tuscaloosa transplant who graduated in 2021 with a degree in history and political science. Primarily interested in 20th century US foreign relations and military history, James hopes to obtain a master's in history or foreign affairs, which he will use to assist and educate local, state, and national policy planners and military leaders.

Anna Kate Manchester, The University of Alabama: a third-year student from Brentwood, Tennessee majoring in history and political Science, with minors in international studies and the Randall Research Scholars Program. Anna Kate is particularly interested in public international law, but her historical foci include geopolitical conflict and the formation of international and regional governmental institutions. She will spend her senior year as a visiting student at St. Catherine's College in Oxford, where she plans to study international law, human rights, and international organizations. After graduating from U.A., Anna Kate plans to obtain her J.D./LL.M. in international law and ultimately practice as an international human rights lawyer.

Caroline Lawrence, the University of Alabama: a senior from Prattville, Alabama graduating in August 2022 with a major in history and minor in American studies. Her main areas of historical interest include the cultural, social, and intellectual history of the United States and specifically the US South. After graduating, she will take a gap year, serving with AmeriCorps Cape Cod before continuing to pursue a graduate degree in history.